Notes for Theodore Joseph "Theodore Einck Sr." Einck:

[Einck Family Tree_Ver 8.FTW] (This is an account of Theodore Einck by Lorraine (Einck) Schrandt in the Einck Book written in 1982.) Theodore Einck was born in Festina, Winneshiek County, Iowa. He went to a country school about a mile from home. In those days they were fortunate to attend four grades or less. He married Ann Mehs in the year of 1855 and they lived there entire life on the farm before retiring in 1920. The farm home was about three miles south of Festina. The farm is now owned and operated by one of his grandsons. They milked cows, raised hogs and crops. Anna also worked very hard at the sewing, gardening and canning. They did their own butchering of animals, curing of meat, rendering of lard, etc. They raised a family of two sons and six daughters. After 33 years they built a new home in Festina on a plot of land given to Anna by her foster father. Theodore brought a beautiful team of horses to town and a top buggy for transportation. He built a barn for the horses and a place to raise chickens. Lorraine was only seven years of age when Theodore died so the story she is writing tells of things she remembered hearing from her dad and other relatives. Theodore had a great sense of humor and we used to enjoy playing with him after school when they stayed over night at their house. Theodore became ill in 1925 and expired July 12 very suddenly at the age of 63. Anna lived in Festina until April 27, 1943. She died rather suddenly when a strong wind swept her from the porch,

Notes for Anna Elizabeth "Annie Mehs" Mehs:

[Einck Family Tree_Ver 8.FTW] A variation on the spelling of the last name include Mess (Winn County marriage record for Anna and Theodore Einck) According to Lorraine Einck Schrandt, Anna died suddenly when a strong wind swept her from the porch. Lorraine used to take care of Grandma Johanna (Schoeberl-Einck) Bengfort before she died. She received $4.00 a week for this. Her dad would always ask Lorraine what she did with all her money? (Per Lorraine on sept 2002) Rose did the same thing for Grandma Anna (Mehs) Einck. According to Lorraine and Lennie, she was a "mean lady" and nobody wanted to take care of her, so Rose was stuck. Helen had to take care of Grandma Catherine (Huinker) Einck. There is an Elizabeth with last name is shown of Sotle(??) on the marriage record of Anna to Theodore Einck (Winn County Marriage Record)

She died on 28 Dec 1871 in Festina, Winneshiek County, Iowa, USA¹⁵³⁻¹⁵⁵.

Notes for Anna Maria Katharina "Mary Catherine Bullerman" Bullerman:

Our Lady of Seven Dolours records indicate that her birthdate was 12/31/1827. (This information was provided to me by Sr. Marion Einck.) Translation of a newspaper article which appeared on November 14th, 1998 in the "Munsterland Zeitung". The article was titled "Searching for fortune in the New World". It chronicles a small part of the journey of Anna Maria Catherina Bullerman, her brother Theodor and his friend, Bernhard Heinrich Eynck. Legden/District - If the Ewering/Bullermann family invites you for a family convention they have to send letters to relatives spread all over Germany - but not even there: Just two ancestors emigrated to America and founded their own families there. Whose descendants partly followed the trace of their ancestors. Legden in the middle of the 19th century: The economical situation is as bad as in every other part of the country. Living at bare subsistence, bad harvests, famine, 290 men and 205 women from the small Munsterland municipality have decided to make their own future in the "New World". Among them had been in 1859 the farm girl Anna Maria Catherina Bullermann, her brother Theodor Bullermann and his colleague Bernhard Heinrich Eynck, who lived on the farm of Bullermann for a period of time. They embark in Vlissingen in the Netherlands. To be able to pay for the passage at all, they spend their last savings. Then six weeks crossing, which some of the weakened passengers did not survive. Arrival in Cincinnati and from that place carrying on further with one of the great immigrant treks. In order to survive the deprivation, above all the emigrants had to hold together. The two emigrants Anna Maria and Theodor told themselves that too. Arrive on the continent from which they hope to attain their long-needed happiness, they marry and call themselves Einck from then on. (I have had this sentence sent off for translation twice, and both times it comes back with this interpretation. I believe the original article written in German, was incorrect, as we know the "they married" is referring to the marriage between Catherine Bullermann and Heinrich Eynck.) The little happiness in Cincinnati, where they first settled, doesn't last long: a puzzling disease, presumably cholera, attacks. So the couple escapes to Winneshiek County in Iowa. The former farm maid from Legden had five children. The last son, Henry at the age of 44. Anna Maria died when the baby was five days old. Neighbors attempted to lend a helping hand as much as possible, because the lack of a mother. Hard times had begun as we can read in an extract of a letter which was written by a helpful neighbor, whose origin was probably Legden to. "Hard Times" "Since Einck's wife was dead Franziska had been there for 17 weeks. It was hard time for her because she had to rise up for calming down the baby four or five times a night, and the daily work had to be done. She was alone together with a farmer with a large amount of cattle. And Einck himself had been continuously sick." From a letter written to their parents in Germany on May 10, 1872, this story is recounted by Johann Anna and Franziska Elpert. (Notes from the Ewering Family Tree Document written in German and translated by Erich Pfeiffer. This was provided to me by Sr. Marian.) The economic situation here in the homeland in the 19th century were anything but rosy. One poor harvest followed another. The main food crops, potatoes and rye, both suffered from blights. The potato bushes wilted early and a fungus turned the rye kernels yellow. For many farmer sons there were only two possibilities, either to emigrate, or to find a so-called "Piggenbrut" (it means that there are only women on the farm), that means to marry into a farm. Industrialization, which provided another possibility to earn money, did not arrive until much later. That explains that from our small town of Legden 290 men and 205 women were searching for their luck in the new world. [Einck Family Tree_Ver 8.FTW] Our Lady of Seven Dolours records indicate that her birthdate was 12/31/1827. (This information was provided to me by Sr. Marion Einck.) Translation of a newspaper article which appeared on November 14th, 1998 in the "Munsterland Zeitung". The article was titled "Searching for fortune in the New World". It chronicles a small part of the journey of Anna Maria Catherina Bullermann, her brother Theodor and his friend, Bernhard Heinrich Eynck. Legden/District - If the Ewering/Bullermann family invites you for a family convention they have to send letters to relatives spread all over Germany - but not even there: Just two ancestors emigrated to America and founded their own families there. Whose descendants partly followed the trace of their ancestors. Legden in the middle of the 19th century: The economical situation is as bad as in every other part of the country. Living at bare subsistence, bad harvests, famine, 290 men and 205 women from the small Munsterland municipality have decided to make their own future in the "New World". Among them had been in 1859 the farm girl Anna Maria Catherina Bullermann, her brother Theodor Bullermann and his colleague Bernhard Heinrich Eynck, who lived on the farm of Bullermann for a period of time. They embark in Vlissingen in the Netherlands. To be able to pay for the passage at all, they spend their last savings. Then six weeks crossing, which some of the weakened passengers did not survive. Arrival in Cincinnati and from that place carrying on further with one of the great immigrant treks. In order to survive the deprivation, above all the emigrants had to hold together. The two emigrants Anna Maria and Theodor told themselves that too. Arrive on the continent from which they hope to attain their long-needed happiness, they marry and call themselves Einck from then on. (I have had this sentence sent off for translation twice, and both times it comes back with this interpretation. I believe the original article written in German, was incorrect, as we know the "they married" is referring to the marriage between Catherine Bullermann and Heinrich Eynck.) The little happiness in Cincinnati, where they first settled, doesn't last long: a puzzling disease, presumably cholera, attacks. So the couple escapes to Winneshiek County in Iowa. The former farm maid from Legden had five children. The last son, Henry at the age of 44. Anna Maria died when the baby was five days old. Neighbors attempted to lend a helping hand as much as possible, because the lack of a mother. Hard times had begun as we can read in an extract of a letter which was written by a helpful neighbor, whose origin was probably Legden to. "Hard Times" "Since Einck's wife was dead Franziska had been there for 17 weeks. It was hard time for her because she had to rise up for calming down the baby four or five times a night, and the daily work had to be done. She was alone together with a farmer with a large amount of cattle. And Einck himself had been continuously sick." From a letter written to their parents in Germany on May 10, 1872, this story is recounted by Johann Anna and Franziska Elpert. (Notes from the Ewering Family Tree Document written in German and translated by Erich Pfeiffer. This was provided to me by Sr. Marian.) The economic situation here in the homeland in the 19th century were anything but rosy. One poor harvest followed another. The main food crops, potatoes and rye, both suffered from blights. The potato bushes wilted early and a fungus turned the rye kernels yellow. Notes for Joseph Mehs:

[Einck Family Tree_Ver 8.FTW] (Notes from Lorraine Schrandt Research) The Mehs family was very poor. They lived on a farm about 1/2 mile south of Festina (south of the Leroy Schneiberger farm). When Frances was about 2 weeks old, her mother died and left Joseph with the four children and no money. Shortly thereafter, Joseph committed suicide. After his death, Bernard and Christina Grewing (maybe an aunt and uncle) raised the children. The 1880 census records for Winneshiek County, Military Township shows the spelling of the last name as "Mess", and that the children were staying with the Grewing family and listed their relationship as niece and nephew to them. No record of Mary Mess as being with them at that time.

Information from Internet (<http://www.jeffhoffman.net/portentry.htm>) Going to America Few of the German states were seafaring powers, and as a result the colonization of America was carried out by other nations. However, some Germans played a role in it. There were, for instance, Germans among the English colonists at Jamestown, Virginia, in 1607. Prussian-born Peter Minuit {whose name in German was Minnewit) became the first governor of the Dutch colony of New Amsterdam in 1626. It was Minuit who purchased the island of Manhattan- today perhaps the most valuable piece of real estate in the world- from local Native Americans for trade goods that were worth about 60 Dutch guilders {the equivalent of $24). The first large group of German immigrants came from the Rhineland, the area that had suffered most during the Thirty Years' War of 1618-48. On October 6, 1683, 13 families from the town of Krefeld arrived in Philadelphia on the ship Concord. They had been invited by William Penn, an English member of the Society of Friends, or Quakers, who had founded the colony of Pennsylvania a year earlier. Wishing to populate this vast tract of land with European settlers, Penn visited the German states to encourage emigration, offering religious freedom and farmland. Most of the passengers on the Concord were Mennonites, a Protestant sect whose practices and beliefs were similar to the Quakers'. Having endured religious warfare in Europe, the Mennonites were pacifists who opposed all forms of violence. Their leader, Francis Daniel Pastorius, had arrived earlier, declaring his intention "to lead a quiet, godly, and honest life in a howling wilderness." These first German Americans established a community called Germantown, which still exists within the boundaries of Philadelphia. Many more German peasants followed during the 18th century . Those who had no money for their trans-Atlantic passage arrived in America as "redemptioners," or indentured servants. They agreed to work for a period of four to seven years to payoff the cost of their ship passage. American colonial landowners came aboard the newly arrived ships to purchase redemptioners in a system that was like temporary slavery. Indeed, colonial newspapers were filled with advertisements offering rewards for redemptioners who had run away from their masters. The journey to America in colonial times was uncomfortable at best and deadly at worst. One German who crossed the Atlantic in 1728 wrote in his diary that the food on ship "consisted of horrible salted corned pork, peas, barley, groats, and codfish. The drink was a stinking water, in which all food was cooked. " The time it took to cross the Atlantic varied greatly, depending on the time of year and the weather. Gottlieb Mittelberger, who emigrated in 1750, wrote that one ship took six months to cross the stormy ocean in winter. Of the 340 persons who had sailed in it, only 21 survived the voyage. Mittelberger noted that many ships sank in mid-ocean, a fact he claimed was concealed so that future emigrants would not be discouraged. The agents of shipping companies and recruiters for the American colonies made extensive efforts to attract immigrants. They traveled through the Rhineland in brightly colored wagons. Drawing a crowd with trumpets and drums, the recruiters described in glowing terms the life that awaited in America. In addition to the dream of free farmland, Germans came in search of religious tolerance. Besides the Mennonites, many Lutherans and Reformed Church members also arrived in colonial America, often coming from the German states Bavaria and Wiirzburg, where Catholicism was predominant. Smaller numbers of German Catholics also arrived, such as a group expelled in 1732 by the staunch Protestant Count Leopold of Firmian. Estimates of the total number of Germans who arrived in America in colonial times range from 65,000 to 100,000. The final group were deserters from the German forces who fought for the British in the Revolutionary Wars. Because Pennsylvania welcomed German religious dissenters, Philadelphia was the most frequent port of entry for German immigrants during the colonial period. One German American citizen of Philadelphia described the rival routine of an immigrant vessel in 1728: "Before the ship is allowed to cast anchor in the harbor, the immigrants are all examined as to whether any contagious disease be among them. The next step is to bring all the new arrivals in a procession before the city hall and then compel them to take the oath of allegiance to the king of Great Britain. After that they are brought back to the ship. Those that have paid their passage are released, the others are advertised in the newspapers for sale." Philadelphia had no monopoly on German redemptioners. In 1709, the government of England encouraged several hundred of them to go to New York by giving them land north of the city in return for their labor. In the 1720s, the French government attempted to colonize the territory of Louisiana by inviting German settlers to New Orleans. For the rest of the 18th century, German immigrants stepped off the ships to begin their American lives in virtually all the colonial ports, from Boston to Baltimore, Charleston, and Savannah. After independence, two of the United States' major exports to Europe were cotton and tobacco. Much of the cotton was shipped from New Orleans to the port of Le Havre, France; tobacco frequently went from Baltimore to Bremerhaven, in northern Germany. To avoid returning home with empty vessels, ship captains took back emigrant passengers, most of whom were German. Sizable numbers of these new immigrants then moved up the Mississippi River from New Orleans or inland on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. In 1843, the newly independent Republic of Texas invited a group of Hessians to establish a colony in Texas. The next year, about 150 families arrived in the port of Brownsville, on the Gulf of Mexico. After they founded the city of New Braunfels, in the central Texas Hill Country , Brownsville became the gateway for many other German settlers. Thousands of Germans also took the long sea journey around the southern tip of South America to reach San Francisco during the Gold Rush of 1849 and over the next few years. It was New York, however, that became the nation's principal port of entry for German immigrants, as for all other European groups. Nearly a million Germans (and almost as many Irish) arrived in New York during the 1850s. In response, New York established an immigrant-receiving station at Castle Garden, a former theater on an island off the southern tip of Manhattan Island. There newcomers were screened for diseases and given information about jobs and lodging, to protect them against "runners" who lured unwary immigrants to boarding-houses where they would be fleeced of their savings. Some of Germany's charitable organizations established offices in New York to help newcomers. As Germans left Bremen, for example, they would be given the address of the New York German Society in the city. There they could find German speakers who would advise them on the best routes to their final destinations. In January 1892, the federal government opened a new immigration-landing station, at Ellis Island in New York Harbor. By that time the peak of German immigration, in the mid-19th century, had passed, but even so about 1.5 million Germans went through Ellis Island until its closing in 1954. By then the international airlines were carrying the majority of the new immigrants to the United States.

A New Life Most of the German settlers who arrived in Pennsylvania in 1683 and established Germantown were cloth weavers. However, numerous other crafts workers and artisans arrived from Germany in colonial times. Printers, bookbinders, paper-makers, carpenters, cabinetmakers, blacksmiths, tailors, cobblers, ironworkers, and stonemasons found a market for their skills in the English colonies. Silk workers from the town of Neufchatel established a colony in Beaufort County, South Carolina. There they raised silkworms on mulberry trees planted on 40,000 acres. German redemptioners sometimes learned trades as apprentices. Such was the case with John Peter Zenger, who arrived in 1709 at the age of 13 and spent eight years under contract to a printer in New York. Zenger later founded his own newspaper, The New-York Weekly Journal. A libel suit brought against him by the colonial government resulted in the first legal victory for freedom of the press in the American colonies. German merchants also set up shop in the New World. Some established taverns stocked with beer, the favorite German beverage. Immigrant Germans founded breweries in New York and Baltimore in the early 1700s. The majority of the colonial German immigrants were farmers. Though the American land seemed limitless, much of it—at least in the English colonies—was covered with forest. Starting a farm meant chopping down trees, clearing the land, and digging out rocks that stood in the way of plows. Undaunted, the German immigrant farmers moved farther into Pennsylvania, up the Hudson River in New York, and into northern New Jersey. Fewer Germans went to New England, though some settled in the Broad Bay region and along the Kennebec River in what later became the state of Maine. German colonial farmers also settled in Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, the Carolinas, and Georgia. Those who were brought by the French into Louisiana as settlers moved up the Mississippi and also into the present-day state of Mississippi. Eighteenth-century German farmers in the Conestoga Valley of Pennsylvania developed a deep-bodied covered wagon to take their crops to market. In the next century, Conestoga wagons modeled after these took thousands of pioneers across the western plains. In the mid-1800s, German American farmers continued westward across the continent. Many took advantage of the free public land offered by the Homestead Act of 1862. From Ohio to Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, and Iowa they planted corn, a crop seldom grown in Germany. A new German immigrant to Missouri in 1861 wrote home: "Corn...that's the most important thing in America, man and beast live from it." Indeed, much of the corn was of a type specifically designed for feeding animals, chiefly the pigs that were among the products of farms in the "corn belt." The largest number of German Americans took up dairy farming. The "dairy belt" included parts of upstate New York as well as Wisconsin, Michigan, and Minnesota. Dairy farms also tended to cluster around large cities, so that their cheese, butter, and milk could be rapidly delivered to urban markets. The cultivation of wheat was a specialty of Germans from Russia. In 1872 the Russian government revoked the special privileges originating with Catherine the Great that had drawn German immigrants to the Volga River and Black Sea regions in the previous century. The action cost Russia some of its best farmers, as thousands of German settlers migrated to the United States. They brought with them the seeds of hard Turkey red winter wheat. This type of wheat could be planted in the fall and survive the harsh winters of the northern plains states for spring harvest. Germans from Russia sowed this crop in the Dakotas, Nebraska, Kansas, and parts of Colorado, helping to turn the vast grasslands into wheat fields that became the bread basket of America. Germans from Russia also put down roots in California, planting grapevines. Those from the Volga region settled around Lodi in central California, and Black Sea Germans formed communities in the San Joaquin Valley around Fresno, where they helped establish a raisin industry. Many German immigrants in the first half of the 19th century were university graduates. Some found jobs as teachers, journalists, and clerks, but others tried their hands at farming. They earned the nickname Latin farmers, after their classical training in ancient Latin and Greek, which ill suited them for the hard life of farming. Despite the enormous influence German American farmers had on U.S. agriculture, a majority of German-speaking immigrants engaged in other kinds of work. Some became legendary success stories. John Jacob Astor, who arrived from Waldorf, Germany, in 1784 as a teenager, became the United States's first millionaire from involvement in the fur trade and real estate investments. Frederick Weyerhaeuser, who arrived penniless in 1852, started work in a sawmill; by 1900 his lumber company owned almost 2 million acres of land. Heinrich Steinweg took his family to New York in 1850 and opened a piano business that became known as Steinway; its products are still standards of musical excellence. Brewers of beer became wealthy and prominent members of every large German American community. The Pabst and Schlitz families in Milwaukee and the Busch family in St. Louis used their fortunes to build parks and other public facilities in their communities. More than most other immigrant groups, German Americans found jobs as skilled workers. Many had learned trades in their native land. Bakers, butchers, brewers, tailors, barbers, carpenters, cabinetmakers, and gardeners did not have to start at the bottom as low-paid unskilled laborers. For instance, the U.S. printing industry was dominated by German Americans, carrying on the tradition begun by Johannes Gutenberg in 1452. Artists, musicians, and clergymen were also among the German immigrant population. The relatively high-paying jobs of German American men enabled their wives to remain at home to fulfill their traditional roles as mothers and homemakers. Relatively few German American women entered the labor force, except as teachers and domestic servants. In 1890 about one out of every five German-born women in the United States worked as a maid, housekeeper, or cook. Many German American women found teaching a rewarding profession. Margaretha Meyer Schurz, wife of the '48er Carl Schurz, is often credited with starting the first kindergarten in the United States. The great numbers of German and Irish immigrants who arrived in the United States in the 1840s and 1850s resulted in a wave of antforeign prejudice. "Nativist" speakers argued that these newcomers were taking jobs from native-born Americans. The fact that so many of the newcomers-nearly all the Irish and about half of the Germans-were Roman Catholic caused fears among those who regarded Catholicism as a threat to American traditions. In addition, German immigrants generally continued to speak their native language, which set them apart from the majority of Americans, who spoke English. And in many towns, Germans' consumption of beer on Sunday, often in lively beer halls, brought condemnation from Anglo-Saxon Protestants who felt this to be a violation of the Sabbath. In 1845, a group later known as the American Party was founded to block foreign immigration. In the election of 1854, this party reached the height of its influence by electing governors or a majority of the legislatures in seven states. Soon afterward, however, the American Party split over the issue of slavery. In 1856 the newborn Republican Party made an appeal for German Americans' votes by publishing its antislavery platform in German as well as English. Four years later, the Republicans' Presidential candidate, Abraham Lincoln, won a close election with the strong support of German American voters in key states. During the Civil War, many German Americans served enthusiastically in the Union army. Fewer fought in the Confederate army, for the majority of German Americans lived outside the Southern states. Germans in St Louis formed a militia that helped ensure that border state's loyalty to The Union. Numerous German Americans rose to the rank of general, including Carl Schurz and the flamboyant George Armstrong Custer, whose great-grandfather (named Kuster) had been one of the Hessians who stayed in the United States after the Revolution. The latter half of the 19th century saw the rise of labor unions and social reform movements in the United States. Labor unions had been formed in Germany as early as the 1840s, and German immigrants played an active role in the U.S. union movement. Skilled German American workers like bakers, tailors, and cigar- makers formed local trade unions in cities such as New York, Philadelphia, Milwaukee, St. Louis, and Chicago. Many German Americans, inspired by the ideas of the German philosopher Karl Marx and other European socialists, saw the labor movement as part of a larger social transformation. The socialist movement was particularly strong in New York and Midwestern cities with large German American populations. In 1916 the mayor of Milwaukee and 21 of the 25 members of its city council were socialists. By today's standards, the goals of the 19th-century socialist labor leaders were modest ones. German Americans led the fight for an eight-hour workday, retirement benefits, and disability insurance. However, business leaders condemned such demands as radical ideas, and bloody clashes between strikers and police turned public opinion against the socialist movement. The more conservative American Federation of Labor (AFL), established in 1886, eventually drew most of the German American trade unions into its membership. However, the AFL refused to admit unskilled workers in such industries as mining, construction, and manufacturing. In the 20th century, the growth of assembly-line industries such as automobile manufacturing created a new wave of labor organizing. Walter Reuther, a German American born in West Virginia in 1907, became active in the struggle to organize automobile workers during the 1930s. Reuther served as president of the United Automobile Workers (UAW) from 1946 until his death in 1970. In 1955, he led the merger of the congress of Industrial Organizations (CIO), an association of industrial workers, with the AFL. Socialism, which was so strong an ideal among 19th- century German Americans, failed to attract the support of most other Americans. Reuther himself fought off a communist attempt to take control of the UAW. Yet many of the German socialists' goals have won universal acceptance: the high standard of living enjoyed by most American workers, the Social Security program that enables elderly Americans to retire comfortably, and government-enforced safety in the workplace.

Putting Down Roots The first German immigrants founded their own community- Germantown, Pennsylvania-setting a pattern for the millions of Germans who followed. Until the 20th century, German Americans preserved their language and culture by settling with others who shared a German heritage. The map of the United States is dotted with German names where the immigrants put down roots: New Braunfels, Texas; New Brunswick, New Jersey; New Berlin, Wisconsin; Rhinebeck, New York; Bismarck, North Dakota. Similarly, Germans who settled in major cities congregated in their own neighborhoods. Shop signs and the spoken language remained German in the Kleindeutschlands (little Germanies) of New York, Chicago, Cincinnati, Milwaukee, St. Louis, and Baltimore until well into the 20th century. In 1914, Cincinnati had four daily German newspapers, four hospitals staffed by German-speaking doctors and nurses, and more than 70 churches where the services were in German. Preservation of the German language was the key to maintaining the cultural traditions that united the German American communities. Not only were the church services in German, but so were the public schools of such cities as Cincinnati, Milwaukee, and St. Louis. At the beginning of World War I, more than 500 German-language newspapers were being published in the United States. Within the tightly knit German American neighborhoods and communities, family ties were the strongest bonds. In 1883, Fackel, the Sunday edition of the Chicagoer Arbeiter-Zeitung, asserted that "the man is the head of the family, its protector, its representative outside the home; the woman is the soul of the family, its guardian angel, its inner compass." Mathilde Anneke, who emigrated to Milwaukee in the 1850s, was an active member of the women's rights movement, publisher of the Deutsche Frauen-Zeitung (German Wives' News)- and was an exception. Most German American women accepted their traditional roles, expressed as Kirche, Kinder, Kuche (church, children, kitchen). To some German Americans, maintaining their heritage was a religious duty. The Mennonites who first arrived in 1683 opposed the taking of oaths and resorting to violence of any kind. The men wore black clothing and hats; the women covered their heads in public and wore long, plain dresses. Because buttons were luxuries of the rich in 17th-century Germany, the Mennonites did not use them. Avoiding what they saw as corrupting influences of the modern world, they preferred to live in their own communities, which spread from Pennsylvania to Nebraska and Kansas. Today some Mennonites have adapted to modern ways, but the most conservative group, the Amish, still do not use electricity, automobiles, or motorized farm equipment. The Hutterites, a similar group, also maintain the German language and traditional customs in their communities. Of course, the vast majority of German Americans were not Mennonites. Lutherans, members of the Reformed church, Methodists, Roman Catholics, and Jews were among the millions who arrived over the past three centuries. Until the 20th century, however, most of them still clung to their German American identity. The Missouri Synod (governing council) of the Lutheran church, for example, was founded in 1847 by German Lutherans who had left Saxony. Similarly, the German Methodist church was a separate branch of the American Methodist Episcopal church until 1924. German American Catholics made up about one-third of all American Catholics in the 1890s. Their preference for German-speaking priests created conflict with the bishops of the American Catholic church, most of whom were Irish. When German American priests in several cities petitioned the church hierarchy in Rome for equal treatment, an Irish American bishop in Louisville declared, "If these German prelates are allowed special legislation as Germans... we will be looked upon as a German church in an English-speaking country." The controversy eventually died down with the creation of separate parishes for German Americans as well as for Poles, Italians, and other non-English-speaking Catholics. After 1830, Jews from the various states of Germany began to arrive in large numbers. They soon formed their own congregations separate from those founded earlier by the descendants of Spanish Jews. German-trained rabbis such as Isaac M. Wise from Bohemia introduced the ideas of Reform Judaism to the United States. Nineteenth-century German American Jews tended to participate in the social and intellectual life of the larger German American community. They were typically as proud of their German cultural heritage as of their Jewish religious identity. Toward the end of the 19th century, they used their national heritage to distinguish themselves from less prosperous Russian Jewish immigrants whom they considered socially inferior. Wherever they settled, German Americans organized their own associations and clubs. One of the earliest, the Sons of Hermann, was founded in New York in 1840 to foster German customs and language and to aid financially needy members. By the turn of the century it had branches in many other cities. (Hermann, the organization's namesake, was a Germanic folk hero whose men defeated three Roman legions at the Battle of Teutoburg Forest in the year A.D. 9.) There were many other German American mutual aid societies, which provided life insurance, medical care, and jobless benefits for members. Countless social clubs, called Vereine (the singular is Verein), were formed in communities large and small. As Carl Entenmann told the Historical Association of Los Angeles in 1929, "We have a saying that when three Germans meet they start a Society ." Some Vereine were associations of people from the same state in Germany, such as the Schwaben Verein. They organized social and cultural activities and sometimes took part in politics. Other Vereine met for a specific purpose, such as the Turnvereine or gymnastic clubs, called turner societies in English. Part of a physical-culture movement founded in 1811 in Germany, the Turnvereine sought to promote health through exercise and gymnastics. The movement also had a socialist bent. The first American Turnverein was established by Friedrich Hecker, one of the " '48ers" who had played an important role in the failed revolutions in Germany. Spreading to virtually every large German American community in the 1850s, the Turnverein movement also carried out military drills. In the Civil War they formed militias to fight on the Union side. Equally popular were Gesangvereine and Singsingbund, German singing societies. Choral singing was a beloved tradition of long standing in Germany. The first American Gesangverein, founded in Philadelphia in 1835, was soon followed by others in Baltimore, New York, Chicago, Cincinnati, and Charleston. The Gesangvereine organized Singsingfests (singing festivals), often in May and October, which featured a mix of German folk songs and classical music. Many Vereine met in neighborhood German beer halls, which were not the same as what we now call bars. The spirit in the beer halls was marked by gemütlichkeit, or "good fellowship." Families came there to enjoy the food, song, and socializing. Orchestras played German music, and the walls were decorated with paintings of scenes in Germany. Many kinds of German wurst (sausage), schnitzel (veal cutlet), and sauerkraut were on the menu. In summer, the crowd moved outdoors to an enclosed garden. By the beginning of the 20th century, most German Americans felt that their place in U.S. society was secure. The German-American Alliance, founded in 1901, claimed 3 million members by 1916. It encouraged the continued use of German in public schools, opposed limits on new immigration, and fought against the movement to prohibit the sale of alcoholic beverages in the United States. However, the outbreak of World War I in Europe in 1914 brought an abrupt change in German American life. In August, Germany sent troops across the neutral nation of Belgium to attack France. Britain entered the war on France's side. Some German Americans defended Germany's war policy, but most merely urged the United States not to get involved in the war. Other Americans generally agreed, but U.S. banks made loans to England and France, allowing them to buy billions of dollars' worth of war materiel from U.S. companies. In 1915 a German submarine sank the British ocean liner Lusitania, causing the deaths of more than 1,000 civilian passengers, including 128 Americans. When the United States protested vigorously, the German government promised to modify its policy of unrestricted submarine attacks on merchant ships. The U.S. President, Woodrow Wilson, ran for reelection in 1916 with the slogan "He kept us out of war." But after Wilson's victory the German government resumed unrestricted submarine warfare. Furthermore, it was revealed that Germany had attempted to persuade Mexico to attack the United States if it entered the war. Ultimately, on April 6, 1917, the United States declared war on Germany. Throughout the United States, all German Americans now came under suspicion of disloyalty. During the years 1917 and 1918 many German Americans were jailed for speaking out or writing in opposition to American involvement in the war. German businesses and homes were vandalized, and "patriotic" mobs sometimes attacked German American citizens. Robert Prager, an outspoken immigrant from Dresden, was lynched in Illinois in 1918. The home-front battle against all things Germanic went to ridiculous lengths. Symphony orchestras were banned from playing German music, and German books were publicly burned, even in such bastions of German American life as Cincinnati. Streets, towns, and even foods were given new, non-German names. The Frankfurter became the hot dog, sauerkraut became liberty cabbage, and German shepherd dogs were now called Alsatians. After the war, anti-German prejudice continued. The use of the German language in schools and churches sharply declined. Many German American clubs disbanded, and newspapers ceased publication. Never again would the German American community be as strong and vital as before 1917. Herbert Hoover, who in 1929 became the first U.S. President of German descent, did not publicize his roots. In the 1930s, Adolf Hitler came to power in Germany. The Deutschamerikanische Volksbund (German American People's League) was formed in 1936 to support Hitler's Nazi government. The Bund, as it was called, attracted attention with public rallies at which the Nazi swastika was displayed. However, its membership never exceeded 25,000 people, and most German Americans were unsympathetic to Hitler's Nazi doctrine. During World War II, German Americans did not encounter the accusations of disloyalty they had faced earlier. In fact, the commander-in-chief of the Allied military forces that defeated Nazi Germany was Dwight David Eisenhower, another German American. Notes for Johann Heinrich "Johann Heinrich Bullerman" Blanke:

[Ott Family Tree.FTW] In Germany, if the woman had the most property, the man took her last name. Translations from the Ewering book: > Die wirtschaftlichen Verhältnisse hier in der Heimat waren im 19. Jahrhundert alles andere als rosig. Es gab laufend MiBerten. Die Hauptnahrungsmittel, Kartoffeln und Roggen, waren von einer Krankheit befallen. Das Kartoffelkraut welkte frühzeitig und der Roggen bekam durch einen Pilz einen gelben Anflug. Fur viele Bauernsohne gab es nur 2 Möglichkeiten, entweder auszuwandern, oder sich eine sogenannte "Piggenbrut" zu suchen, um sich irgendwo einzuheiraten. Die Industrialisierung, die alternative Verdienstmöglichkeiten bot, setzte ja erst viel später ein. The economic situation here in the homeland in the 19th century were anything but rosy. One poor harvest followed another. The main food crops, potatoes and rye, both suffered from blights. The potato bushes wilted early and a fungus turned the rye kernels yellow. For many farmer sons there were only two possibilities, either to emigrate, or or to find a so-called "Piggenbrut" [this is a dialect expression I have never heard], that means to marry into a farm. Industrialization, which provided another possibility to earn money, did not arrive until much later. > Daher ist es auch zu erklären, daß allein aus unserem kleinen Ort Legden 290 männliche und 205 weibliche Personen in der neuen Welt ihr Glück Suchten. That explains that from our small town of Legden 290 men and 205 women were searching for their luck in the new world. Die Entbehrungen der Ankommenden waren sehr groß, denn die gesamte Überreise dauerte durchschnittlich volle 6 Wochen. Im Hafen Vlissingen/Holland, wo die Schiffsreise begann, wurden die Auswanderer gewöhnlich regeirecht ausgeplündert, um die Überfahrt bezahlen zu können. Nach der gefährvollen Seereise begann der entbehrungsreiche lange Landweg, mit der ständigen Gefahr von Indianerüberfällen. Wenn man seinen zugewiesenen Platz allerdings erreicht hatte, war die allergrößte Not allerdings vorbei. In diesem Zusammenhang ist ein Brief vom 09. August 1870 von einem jungen Mädchen an ihre Eltern und Geschwister interessant. Das Mädchen war als Haushälterin nach dem Tode von Anna Maria Bullermann (siehe auch besonderes Kapitel Anna Maria Bullermann) auf dem Hofe Eynck beschäftigt. Unter den Auswanderern befanden sich damals auch aus unserer Familie die Magd Anna Maria Catherina Bullermann (*03.12.1827) und der Weber Theodor Bullermann (*10.06.1838), die mit dem Weber Bernhard Heinrich Eynck (*17.09.1831) aus dem Haulingort am 28.03.1859 die Heimat mit dem Zielort Cincinnati/Ohio verließen. In diesem Ort hatte sich die Tante der beiden Geschwister Anna Christine Bullermann (*12.11.1818) niedergelassen, die bereits am 01.04.1845 nach Amerika ausgewandert war. Bernhard Heinrich Eynck hat vor der Auswanderung auf dem Hofe Bullermann gelebt. The new arrivals suffered a lot, as the whole journey took an average of six full weeks. At the port of Vlissingen/Holland, where their journey began, the emigrants usually were literally stripped of their possessions, just to pay for the passage. After the dangerous sea voyage, the long and demanding overland trek began - the danger of an attack by natives constantly present. Once the predetermined destination was reached, most of the suffering was past though. In connection with that a letter from a young girl to her parents and kin from August 9, 1870 is of interest. The girl worked as a housekeeper on the Eynck farm, after Anna Maria Bullermann's death (refer the special chapter on Anna Maria Bullermann). Among the emigrants in those days were the farm help Anna Maria Catherina Bullermann (born December 12, 1827) and the weaver Theodor Bullermann (born June 10, 1838) from our family. They both left their homeland for Cincinnati/Ohio, together with the weaver Bernhard Heinrich Eynck (born September 17, 1831) of Haulingort. There their aunt (Anna's and Theodor's) Anna Christine Bullermann (born November 12, 1818) had settled, after emigrating to America on April 1, 1845. Bernhard Heinrich Eynck lived on the Bullermann farm before emigrating himself. This is a beautiful, full-modelled vessel of 1300 tons register. She is 192 feet long on deck, has 40 feet extreme breadth of beam, and 24 feet depth of hold, including 8 feet height of between-decks. Her ends, though full, with rounded lines, are well formed, and her floor is long and buoyant. The bow rakes boldly forward, but preserves its angular form to the rail, and is tastefully ornamented with a full figure of the sage whose name she bears. The stern is light and rounded, her run easy and clean, and her sheer lively and truly graduated. She has painted ports in a white belt, her bottom is painted copper-color, and rest of her hull outside is black; inside she is buff-color, relieved with white. The whole height of her bulwarks, including the monkey rail, is 5[1/2] feet, and she has a full topgallant forecastle, the height of the rail, under which are accommodations for the crew. Aft the foremast there is a large house, which contains the galleys, staterooms and storerooms, and protects entrance which lead to the deck below. Her after house is built into a half poop deck, and contains two handsome cabins, the after one finished with fancy woods, gilding, &c., and the forward one is white, and both are tastefully furnished, well lighted and ventilated. The ship herself is built in the best style. Her frame, wales, hooks, and pointers, and the knees in the hold, are all of seasoned white oak, and her keelsons, deck frames, lower deck, and ceiling are of hard pine, and she is square-fastened throughout, and butt and bilge-bolted with copper. She has three tiers of midship keelsons; and they are placed so that those above not only cover the scarphs of those below, but also the seams, in such a manner that the upper keelson binds and covers the longitudinal seams of all the others. Her bilge-work commences at 15 by 16 inches, and diminishes without projection to 10 inches thickness under the lower part of the hanging knees, which rest upon a lap-strake or stringer. She is cross-braced with timber outside of the ceiling, between all the hanging knees, both in the hold and in the between-decks, and these braces are bolted through all. Her staunchions [sic], too, are the width of the beams, and extend to both decks. Her ends are well secured with massive hooks and pointers. Her wales are of white oak, 5[1/2] by 7 inches, and outside as well as inside, she is finished in superior style. She has built lower masts of hard pine, also hard pine topmasts and jibbooms, and double topsail yards, the lower ones slung to the topmasts instead of to the caps, like Howes's rig, though the principle is the same, as the yards are stationary. In all her outfits she is liberally supplied, and, viewed as a whole, is a superior vessel. She was built at East Boston, by the Messrs. Boole, the builders of the fine ships Weymouth, Emerald, and Endymion, which have all proved very successful. The Plutarch is intended for Messrs. Howland & Ridgeway's line of New York and Liverpool packets. She is now fitting out at the Grand Junction wharf, East Boston, and will be ready for sea in a few days. We advise all who take an interest in shipping to call and inspect her.
